Dear Colleague:

With this newsletter we take the liberty of informing you about some important new developments at our company.

Moran transfers sales rights to Brill

On January 1, 2011 Moran transferred the sales rights to all its micropublications to the internationally acclaimed scholarly publishing firm Brill, of Leiden, the Netherlands. After many years in the micropublishing business founder Dr. Gerard T. Moran sought a way to play a less active role, while at the same time guaranteeing the continuity and availability for research of the list of unique historical materials he has built up with the cooperation of archives, libraries and other institutions in the Netherlands and elsewhere. The choice of Brill is no accident. With its 2006 acquisition of IDC Publishers, Brill already has an extensive collection of primary source materials in microform and online. The Moran titles therefore find an attractive new home and will be integrated into Brill's marketing and sales network. The Moran website will remain open, but new orders and inquiries will be handled by Brill. Moran Micropublications itself is being converted into a consultancy for primary source publishing solutions and related projects.
